BBVA creates a new global area of Sustainability, led by Javier Rodríguez Soler

BBVA gives a new boost to its strategy, promoting sustainability to the highest level of the organization. Javier Rodríguez Soler, current country manager in the U.S., will head the new area, which aims to make BBVA the leading bank for clients in sustainability solutions. Separately, Jaime Sáenz de Tejada (CFO) and Rafael Salinas (CRO) are exchanging responsibilities.

“This new global business area will give a definitive boost to our leadership in sustainability and to our strategic priority of helping our clients in their transition toward a sustainable future,” BBVA chairman Carlos Torres Vila said.

In 2019 BBVA integrated sustainability as one of its six strategic priorities, focusing on the fight against climate change and inclusive growth.

In recent years, BBVA has reached important milestones, including its pledge to channel €200 billion between 2018 and 2025 in sustainable financing, doubling its original commitment; its decision to stop financing companies with coal-related activities, or the Net Zero 2050 commitment, which involves net zero CO2 emissions, taking into account both the bank’s direct emissions (carbon neutral since 2020), as well as indirect ones, those of the clients it finances.

These achievements, among others, have helped BBVA become the most sustainable bank in Europe and the second worldwide, according to the Dow Jones Sustainability Index.

Climate change and the transition toward a low-carbon economy have relevant implications in the value chain of a wide array of productive sectors, and will require significant investments in many industries. Technological advances in energy efficiency, renewable energies, efficient mobility and the circular economy, all represent new business opportunities. In addition to the huge challenge and the opportunity brought about by the decarbonization of the economy, BBVA sees sustainability in a much wider sense. This includes the impact of human activity in natural ecosystems, biodiversity loss, as well as inclusive development as a path to growth while reducing the inequalities in the communities in its footprint.

As all BBVA employees and areas integrate sustainability in their day-to-day activities, the Sustainability area will design the Group’s sustainability strategic agenda, define and enhance sustainability working plans from the different global and transformation areas (Risks, Finance, Talent & Culture, Data, Engineering and Organization, among others), and develop of new products in this field.
Additionally, the area will be in charge of developing specialized knowledge to provide differential advice to clients, something that the new area will ensure through its full integration with the rest of the bank’s key business areas. It will also establish commercial methodologies and relationships with strategic partners to increase sustainability-related business throughout the Group.

Teams belonging to the Global Sustainability Office (GSO), created in March 2020, will join the new area. The GSO has been a fundamental unit to accomplish the milestones above-mentioned.

“Sustainability is a strategic priority and it is a responsibility for all of us who are part of BBVA,” CEO Onur Genç said. “The creation of this new global business area will allow us to seize the huge opportunity coming from sustainability, developing innovative products and strengthening the strategic relationship with our clients.”

Javier Rodríguez Soler, current country manager of BBVA in the U.S., will lead the new area, which will be part of the highest level of the organization, the Global Leadership Team, and will report to CEO Onur Genç. Additionally, and considering the highly strategic and transformational nature of the area, he will also report on those fields to the Group Chairman Carlos Torres Vila.

Additionally, the global Heads of Finance and Risk, Jaime Sáenz de Tejada and Rafael Salinas, are exchanging responsibilities. This change will contribute to strengthen both areas given their complementary backgrounds gained throughout their respective professional careers.
